A college entrance exam company determined that a score of 25 on the mathematics portion of the exam suggests that a student is ready for college-level mathematics. To achieve this goal, the company recommends that students take a core curriculum of math courses in high school. Suppose a random sample of 200 students who completed this core set of courses results in a mean math score of 25. If the company's claim is true, what is the standard deviation of 3.3? Do these results suggest that students who complete the core curriculum are ready for college level mathematics? Then they are scoring above 25 on the math portion of the exam? Complete parts A) through D) below.

Click the icon to view the table of critical t-values.

D) Use the classical approach at the  $\alpha = 0.05$  level of significance to find the critical value and test the hypothesis. Identify the test statistic.

$t_0 = \boxed{}$  (Round to two decimal places as needed.)

Identify the critical value. Select the correct choice below and fill in the answer box within your choice.

(Round to two decimal places as needed.)

A.  $t_{0.025} = \boxed{}$

B.  $t_0 = \boxed{}$

A college entrance exam company determined that a score of 22 on the mathematics portion of the exam suggests that a student is ready for college-level mathematics. To achieve this goal, the company recommends that students take a core curriculum of math courses in high school. Suppose a random sample of 250 students who completed this core set of courses results in a mean math score of 22.2 on the college entrance exam with a standard deviation of 3.8. Do these results suggest that students who complete the core curriculum are ready for college-level mathematics? That is, are they scoring above 22 on the math portion of the exam? Complete parts a through d below.

a) Use the P-value approach at the  $\alpha = 0.05$  level of significance to test the hypotheses in part (a).

Identify the test statistic:

$t_0 = \text{_____}$  (Round to two decimal places as needed.)

Identify the P-value:

P-value =  $\text{_____}$  (Round to three decimal places as needed.)

d) Write a conclusion based on the results. Choose the correct answer below:

The null hypothesis and claim that there is sufficient evidence to conclude that the population mean is  $\mu > 22$  is true.
